

TWO LIVES ADRIPT

WORKSHOP SCRIPT READ THROUGH

WINSTON INTRODUCTION - in Bold

In a New York hospital one night in 1946 a photographer, LIZZIE, forty-two years old and originally from France, recounts moments from her life to her son, who is in a coma. With her is the ghost of her father, PIERRE, telling his story alongside hers. Their stories come together as they are about to emigrate to America, when she is eight years old.

TWO LIVES ADRIPT follows the life of LIZZIE, a survivor of the Titanic, alongside the story of her father, PIERRE - leading up to the moment he placed her in a lifeboat while he went down with the ship. Two lives on different timelines, their stories, intertwined by hope, courage

Prologue: LIZZIE'S FLASHBACK DREAM

FADE IN: TOTAL DARKNESS. The year is 14th April 1912.

TIMELINE DEVICE - SHIP'S COMPASS

Throughout the show, the year is shown on a projected image of a ship's compass.

Instead of degrees, the compass indicates different timelines according to the scenes. These are:

1891-1911- Pierre's village in France

1912 - The sinking of the Titanic

1913-1945 - Lizzie in New York

1946 - Adult Lizzie in a New York hospital

DURING THE PROLOGUE

PROJECTIONS BEGIN: Projections: Flickering black-and-white footage - Titanic passengers rush to lifeboats, the ship tilts, flares light the night.

There is distant shouting, crashing waves, groaning steel, muffled screams. We hear the Lifeboat prologue music beneath the chaos. Where a voice over of a young Lizzie calls to her Father.

PROLOGUE

CUE:

A chaotic mix of distant shouts of passengers, the crash of waves against the ship's hull, Titanic's steel groaning under pressure, and muffled screams blending into the howling wind. (GO)

Scene One

LIZZIE, age forty-two, in 1946. A hospital in New York at Night. She is talking to her son Peter who is in a coma.

LIZZIE

I thought this was going to be a happy ending. We made it through, safe and sound, didn't we? This side of the ocean, at least. Sure, in Europe they're still in pieces. Japan - I know, I know. But here. Things had started looking up. The war's over. Normal service has been resumed, like they say on the radio. Then you go and do this. Come on, Pete, you're in Eighth Grade. You're not a little kid any more. You know better. So what's the big idea? Two whole days, now. Enough is enough. We have things to do, places to go, we don't have time for this. They say people in comas can still hear, so I'm hoping that somehow, somewhere, my voice is finding you.

You can hear me, can't you? The doctor said you probably could. Or was it possibly? Either way. I'm talking all night long, like it or not. Same as last night. Same as the last thirteen years, I guess you'd say. You know the score by now. You're not getting out of this until I get what I want. I'm chewing your ear until you open your eyes. Deal?

Deal.

Oh, you know all about me leaving France, the stuff everybody knows. I wouldn't try to keep it secret from you, even if I could. But about why we left? Anything at all about your Grandpapa? Suddenly, PIERRE lowers the newspaper, excited by what he has read. He hasn't heard her.

PIERRE

LIZZIE

Know what? I'll let him tell you this part.

Scene Two

PIERRE, nineteen, in 1891. A village in France.

PIERRE

Paris! Have you heard? It's fantastic! This new Tower. These new dances. These artists. I've got to go there. You can actually climb this thing, did you know? Looks like it comes from Mars. Goes higher than anything ever built before. Think of the view! Then there's this lucky fellow, spends all night in a club, drinking, drawing pictures of these delectable dancers showing their... fancy anyone not wanting to go to Paris! Especially when all you've known your whole life is what's round here. Mud. Fields. Manure. Filthy cart tracks. More mud.

I mean, I'm perfectly happy here, really. I am. Everyone here knows me. Pierre, the greengrocer's son. They see me every day. Cycling round the village, delivering fruit and vegetables. Waving, whistling, smiling. Serving in the shop. Good morning, Madame, good morning, Monsieur. Care for some fruit? Maybe some veg?

Back in 1946.

Two World Wars I've lived through now, Pete. And the rest. That's life, though, isn't it? Got to go with the flow. Constantly adjusting to new situations. Papa, he married the girl of his dreams. Then they moved to the city of his dreams. Things couldn't have been better. But it didn't pan out quite the way he expected. Dreams often don't.

PIERRE, twenty-five, 1897. Paris.

PIERRE

Paris is everything they say it is. Fantastic! Only one tiny little, infinitesimal thing. We've been here over three years and, so far, no-one's actually noticed the new artistic genius in town. Me, that is, I'm talking about me. Frankly, I'm slightly disappointed in them, the people here. I'm not sure how much they actually know about Art. But they do know what they don't like. My paintings.

I've been doing some of my best stuff, too! Masses of it. Churning out works of sheer genius. Marie agrees. But then. I overslept. Missed my shift at the factory. Twice, as it happens. I said, look, I swear on my mother's grave it won't happen again. But. It happened again. I mean, it's all right, it's not like I broke my word or anything. My mother's not actually dead, either. Mind you, it would kill her if she found out her son lost his job.

I got another one easily enough, though. I won't say what it is, but after I've done the day's deliveries there's plenty of time to paint. When Marie's not busy working in the cafe, she's going from gallery to gallery, showing them my pictures. She won't tell me what they say, but I get the gist. We tried setting up a stall in the street but turns out you need a licence. Plus, no-one was interested. No accounting for lack of taste. Marie says I mustn't give up. That's the kind of woman she is. Even when we can't make ends meet. Wonder how we'll survive. Her faith in me never falters. The last thing I want to do is let her down, you know? (GO)

He went home. He and Maman worked it out. Another job, cheaper

The first job I had was working on a telephone switchboard. I was

Dm

They say this city is famous for its sewers.
We should be proud, they say. What happens when the sewers don't work, though?
When they overflow? Our homes get full of stinking, filthy water... and worse. People fall ill, like Marie.

Are we still supposed to feel proud?

LIZZIE, 1946.

LIZZIE

I kind of remember that. The room being freezing cold and wet. How Papa closed up like a clam when we lost her. How it was afterwards, when she was gone. Her, though? She's more like a silhouette. The light behind her. Hard to make out her features. I think I remember the feel of her shawl. Or a comforting smell will sometimes take me back.

Maman.

Other memories are a whole lot sharper. That New Year's Eve, for instance. When your Dad told me he wasn't going to stick around? Wasn't much of a family man, as it turned out. And oh, I so wanted us to be a family. Wanted you for so long.

That night, when midnight struck, it was also just the two of us. You were fast asleep back then, too. Still holding tight to that blue baby blanket. With me gazing through the bars of your cot. Eleven and a half short years ago.

LIZZIE, thirty-one, 1935. New York.

Happy New Year, kid.

When people say, sleeping like a baby, this must be what they have in mind. Not when you holler the whole night through. This. This peace. It's good. Been enough hollering, one way and another, in this apartment, hasn't there? And not all of it yours. (Turn page)

Couple of years after my mother died, your Grandpapa and I left Paris. I was eight years old. Never went back. We travelled North, to Cherbourg. To the harbour there. This is the part I guess you know about.

Scene Thirteen

PIERRE, forty, and LIZZIE, eight,

PIERRE

Come on, cuddle up. That wind is sharp, isn't it? It's coming from somewhere very cold. Once the boat gets here, we'll be fine.

They wrap their arms around one another.

LIZZIE

I don't want to live in a cold place, Papa.

PIERRE

No, no, where we're heading, it's warm and safe. It'll be the start of a new story for us.

LIZZIE

What's wrong with the old story?

PIERRE

Don't worry. We'll be fine. There's a statue there that looks after everyone. On an island by a great big city. And underneath the statue is a poem.

LIZZIE

I don't like poems.

PIERRE

Well, you'll like this one.

LIZZIE

Why? What does it say?

PIERRE

It says, anyone is welcome, especially when they're huddled up against the cold, like we are. Do you know where it came from, that statue?

LIZZIE

Where?

PIERRE

It was a gift from France - from us! Because we love freedom too. The statue's named after freedom, la liberté... It's the Statue of Liberty.

LIZZIE

Is it a man or a lady?

PIERRE

It's a lady, like Maman, lighting the way for people like us. That's why we're going there in a big ship. You'll be happy there, I promise.
